From Lindsay Gottlieb (University of California Women's Head Basketball Coach), this 2-3 zone play gets you either an open 3-point shot for your best shooter, or a quick basket inside. You can run it to either side. If time on the clock is not a factor, O1 passes to O2 and then O2 passes back to O1 (to get the zone to shift). If time is a factor, skip these first two passes and get right into the play. O3 drops down toward the baseline (diagram 1).

O1 dribbles a little to the left and O2 cuts underneath (diagram 2) and through to the left corner-wing area for a possible pass from O1 and a shot.

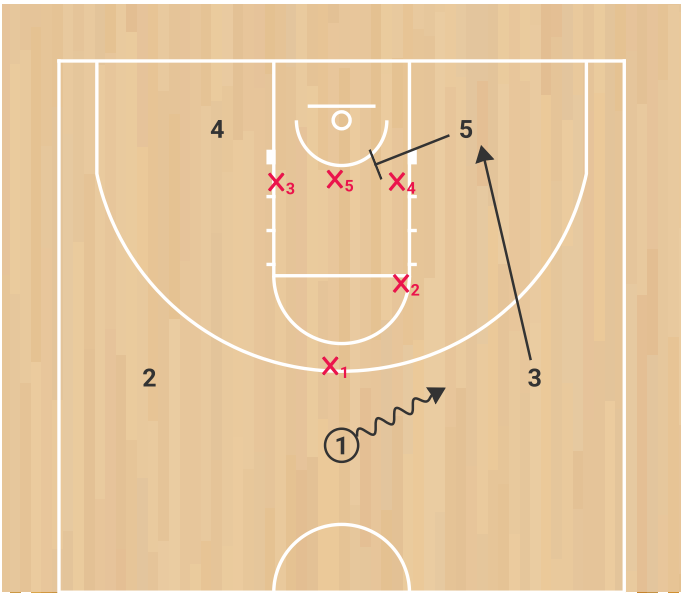

Meanwhile, O5 screens the middle low defender (X5), and O3 screens the opposite low defender (X4). O4 cuts under the two screens to the ballside block. If the X3 defender moves outside to cover O2, then the quick pass from O1 to O4 is open for a lay-up (diagram 3). If X3 stays inside, O2 has the open 3-point shot, or might feed the post inside.
